Carl Fisher concentrates his trial practice in the defense of commercial litigation, commercial motor vehicle, general liability and product liability cases involving personal injury, catastrophic injury, wrongful death, property damage and commercial damages.

A Fellow of the American College of Trial Lawyers, Carl has tried more than 80 civil cases to verdict in Illinois, Indiana, Maryland, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Texas and Washington, and has been admitted pro hac vice in over 30 state and federal courts.

Carl is the leader of Hinshaw's transportation practice. He has represented American trucking companies and European, Asian, and American product manufacturers in their lawsuits throughout the United States, served as national trial counsel for a management services company and several consumer services companies, and acted as national product liability supervisory counsel for a consortium of international amusement ride companies.

Professional Background

While a Judge Advocate with the U.S. Marine Corps, Carl tried more than 250 federal felony cases involving murder, robbery, burglary, larceny, drug offenses and military offenses.

In 1985 and 1986, Carl tried 10 straight cases to defense verdicts, the streak coming to an end in a hung jury on a wrongful death case. His trial record has continued into the second decade of the 21st century where he has prevailed in over 70% of his cases tried.

In addition to his academic accomplishments during law school, Carl was an active moot court participant. He was a member of the National Moot Court team and also served on the Moot Court Board. While attending the University of Illinois as an undergraduate, Carl became a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Omicron Delta Kappa, Delta Sigma Rho-Tau Kappa Alpha and Phi Eta Sigma fraternities. He was on the Dean's List all four years.

Representative Matters

- Scheinman v. Martin's Bulk Milk: A multi-millionaire plaintiff was rear-ended by a co-defendant truck driver employed by a co-defendant motor carrier. Plaintiff's brain injury and 3rd degree burns caused him to be institutionalized for the rest of his life. Our broker and shipper clients moved for summary judgment arguing that there was insufficient evidence to show that the driver was an agent of the broker and shipper. The motions were made in the face of significant Illinois appellate case law that suggests a broker and shipper may be held liable if there are indicia of control demonstrated by the broker or shipper. The Chief Judge of the Northern District of Illinois granted summary judgment to the broker and shipper. After summary judgment was granted, case settled with trucking company for multiple millions of dollars. Scheinman v. Martin's Bulk Milk, 2013 WL 6467525 (N.D.Ill.)
- Stojkovich v. Westinghouse: An inebriated passenger escaped out of a stalled elevator car, fell down the shaft, and sustained significant traumatic head injury. Although defendant client's New York vice-president criticized the local elevator maintenance manager, calling his supervision of the elevator maintenance services "negligent," the jury only assessed 25% responsibility on the elevator service company. Defense pre-trial and trial objections to allowing punitive damages claim were upheld on appeal. Appellate decision establishes standards of review for trial court evidentiary and non-evidentiary hearings on appropriateness of a punitive damages claim. Stojkovich v. Monadnock, 281 Ill. App.3d 733, 666 N.E.2d 704 (1st Dist. 1996).
- Roland v. Astro Amusement Company: Plaintiff was a 45-year old U.S. Postal Service mail carrier who sustained a frontal lobe injury after he walked around protective fencing and into the path of a fully operating amusement ride. The demand on the case was $2 million; the offer on the case included a structured settlement package valued at $400,000. After a three-week trial, the jury returned a verdict in two hours in favor of all the defendants. On appeal, the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the trial court's evidentiary rulings concerning demonstrative evidence used by the defendants and reinterpreted Illinois law on the duty owed to trespassers. Roland v Langlois, 945 F.2d 956 (7th Cir. 1991).

- Northern Trust v. Upjohn Company: The plaintiff was a woman who underwent an abortion procedure at a Chicago hospital. During the procedure, she sustained permanent brain damage as a result of cardiopulmonary arrest. Her claim included allegations of medical malpractice against the treating physician and hospital and product liability against our client, The Upjohn Company. After six weeks of trial and one week of jury deliberations, the jury returned a verdict of $9.5 million against all defendants. On appeal, the Illinois Appellate Court reversed the decision and entered judgment in favor of all the defendants. The appellate decision established new law in Illinois that expert testimony is required on drug product liability warnings cases and reiterated that changes in packet inserts after an incident are inadmissible. Northern Trust v Upjohn, 111 Ill.App.3d 222, 333 N.E.2d 444 (1st Dist. 1989).
- Walters v. Maren Engineering: An employee at a Kansas paper recycling company severely injured his hand in an altered and modified recycling machine. A choice of law motion filed on the eve of trial resulted in Kansas' several liability law being applied. The appellate court affirmed the trial court's application of foreign law, and Kansas practitioners use this case as an example of the requirements for advancing a several liability and phantom defendant defense. Walters v. Maren Engineering, 246 Ill.App.3d 1884, 617 N.E.2d 170 (1st Dist. 1993).
- Carpenter v. Whirlwind: In this product liability action, the plaintiff, a chronically unemployed individual being trained for new work, had his hand amputated in an industrial work saw at a training center. A policy limits demand was made on the product manufacturer, who maintained that he would rather have his family business go bankrupt than pay the plaintiff anything. The defense claimed the plaintiff was not entitled to an award because of his assumption of risk and faulty training and maintenance by the plaintiff's employer. The trial resulted in a no liability verdict in favor of the defendant.
- Ames v. Mori Seiki Co.: This product liability/commercial breach of warranty case involved a husband and wife whose company purchased a CNC machine lathe from a local dealer of defendant clients, Mori Seiki Co. Ltd. and Mori Seiki USA. While operating the machine, the husband was severely injured by a piece of rotating bar stock extending beyond the end of the machine. Although the defendants were not aligned on all issues, constant meetings to avoid infighting in front of the jury resulted in a cohesive, coordinated defense. Plaintiffs' demand for settlement was $3 million. No offers were made. After a five week trial, the Decatur, Illinois, jury returned a verdict in favor of all defendants. The Illinois Appellate Court affirmed the defense verdict in an unpublished opinion.
- Moyer v. Holloway Equipment Ltd.: In this commercial motor vehicle accident case, the plaintiff sustained disabling leg injuries after being crushed by a Canadian truck driver's nine axle low boy trailer as it was being loaded. Although the company client was no longer in operation and the truck driver could not be located for deposition or trial testimony, the jury was convinced that the accident was caused either by the contributory negligence of the plaintiff or the combined negligence of two third-party defendants who settled directly with the plaintiff before and during the trial.
- Cosentino v. Hirschbein: In this catastrophic injury and wrongful death motor vehicle accident case, the client drove into the aftermath of an accident that killed a 29-year-old "bread winner" husband, severely maimed his widow, and resulted in the stillbirth of their second child. The claim against the client was that her slight impact with the plaintiff's vehicle exacerbated and aggravated the injuries received by the widow. During the trial, the investigating police officer changed his story from the favorable version at his pretrial deposition to adverse testimony in favor of the plaintiff. The defense expert anatomy professor helped establish that there was no causal connection between the client's impact with the plaintiff's vehicle and any of the injuries or death. The demand was $2 million; there was no offer. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant.
- Welch v. Central Transport: In this admitted liability case, the truck driver struck and killed the plaintiff's decedent pedestrian at a tollway booth. At trial, the plaintiff's family members extolled their son's and brother's virtues, although his estranged father testified that he was dishonest and loose with money. Our client offered $200,000. The verdict was $199,000.
- Alop v. Edgewood: Child playing on condominium association's playground sustained head injury after falling from slide onto hard surface without sand, chips or cushioning. Defendant's summary judgment motion was granted and upheld on appeal, based on obviousness of risk of falling even to a four-year-old. Alop v. Edgewood Valley Condominium Association, 159 Ill.App.3d 482, 507 N.E.2d 19 (1st Dist. 1987).
